"The owners of the four so-called seventy footers entered into an agreement which governed certain of the races between them during the last summer. It was my general understanding of this agreement that it gave the right to any one of the yachts, at its own option, to add ballast ines.

"My attention has just been called to the fact that I had no right to take on additional ballast in any case after the yacht had once been measured, eithout notifying the authorities under whose appices the races were conducted to precuring an official remeasurement. It had never occurred to me that I was obliged to comply with this condition, but I hasten to say that I think my yacht was subject to disqualities then for taking on additional ballast without official remeasurement and that it was not entitled to any prizes under these circumstances.

"I deeply regret that I should have been guilty of such a blunder, but will say the blunder was committed thoughtlessly. I cannot of course, cousen to amopt any prize, which was won by my yacht in since the time of his collapse.
